This is a very well thought out program. I liked that it covered important and often dry material in a way that was fairly interesting and entertaining. It seems that a lot of thought was put into avoiding information overload, which I thought was good. After a certain point, everyone has the tendency to start to zone out mentally... Also, I thought the very beginning section about the ridiculously expensive pizza, etc. was great. It was a clear way to show the consequences of being financially irresponsible. Too often, people my age think it's not a big deal because they can't SEE the consequences all at once. Finally, I appreciated the fact that you guys acknowledged the fact that a lot of financial companies offer valuable services. I also liked that FoolProof did not shift blame to any one group but plainly stated that both the financial institutions AND the consumer need to behave responsibly.
